THE popular notion that mountains are the result of volcanic upheavals is erroneous. They are caused by glaciers, which, when they slowly plow the earth's surface, push up before them great masses of earth, rock and mineral. There are volcanic mountains, however, which are built up from the constant deposit of lava and dust from the crater. But volcanic formations on a mountain are not always an evidence that the mountain itself is a volcano. In the deserted silver mining town of Calico, the mountain is no longer active but man has not taken up his habit there again.

The Rev. Albert Warriner, a minister of Terre Haute, Indiana, has some antidotes for the High Cost of Living. He makes all the clothes for himself and his family and still finds time to save souls in addition to saving money.

Frederick Keating of the Society of American Magicians shows once again how easy it is to fool the "sucker" with cards.

Apple flapjacks are a delicious dish, not too expensive, and in this issue of the magazine there is an interesting exposition on how to make them.

The magazine closes with a collection of jokes entitled "laughographs."
